Project #3 - Self Evaluation

Prior to working on the infographic, I think I had a fairly good understanding of a lot of the design principles that I later incorporated into the graphic. Even though I knew of these principles, having to explicitly apply them in this one infographic really helped me understand their overall purpose in creating a cohesive and effective infographic.

The screencast did not feel very different from previous screen-recordings we've done in prior projects, but it was interesting having the audience be people on my 'team.' As this meant I did not need to explain the content, as the 'team' would already be privy to that information, but only justify my design decisions. The ability to point / highlight different parts of the infographic while I spoke was very useful, in my opinion, and really aided in my description of the design philosophies I utilized.
